

Principles and practices in realising the child's right to play

- A Distance Training Course

A Chance to Play South Africa (ACTP) is excited to offer you the opportunity to register for our distance training course – 'Principles and Practices in Realising the Child's Right to Play'.

Play is one of the most important activities of childhood, yet it is one of the most neglected of all children's rights (The Right to Play and Recreation – Article 31 of the UN Convention on the Rights of a Child). Research shows that the strongest indications of long-term success are the skills that cannot be taught, but are learnt through free, child-directed play e.g. leadership, teamwork, getting along with others, planning and organising, self-management, using initiative, creativity, problem-solving, decision-making, independence, confidence and communication skills.

After years of facilitating successful face-to-face training workshops, ACTP is offering a distance training course to minimise the high costs of transport and accommodation, as well as accommodating the time constraints of staff involved with other projects. Participants can study in their own homes or work environment. This course offers far more detail than is possible in our 3-day training workshop or 6-session virtual workshop series.

Let's put play on the map

The ACTP Distance Course will equip you/your staff with knowledge about:

- What play really is, its importance in children's development and wellbeing and observing play
- The physical, cognitive, social and emotional benefits of different types of play including outdoor play, group games, pretend play, loose parts play, creative play, indigenous games and thinking play (brain games)
- The right of children to play and the barriers that prevent play from happening
- How to enable play in a variety of situations for children of different ages and abilities (Play Forums; Play Clubs; Street Play; How to organise Play Days); Advocacy and Lobbying.

Requirements:

- Competency in English
- Access to a computer for processing the Course Material and preparing the Assignments
- Access to email to send the Assignments and to receive the trainer's comments
- Access to Skype, Zoom or WhatsApp Video Chat
- Educational level: At least a matriculation certificate or equivalent

Who Will Benefit From Undertaking This Training?

It is our hope that those who undertake this training will commit to providing recreational play opportunities for their own families and in other environments such as parks, suitable open spaces, recess at school, after school clubs including play clubs where children of all ages and abilities can benefit from the opportunity to play.

- ✦ Youth leaders, after-school club facilitators, teachers at all levels, child and youth care workers, community workers, sport & recreation officers, parks department officers, parents, those involved with faith-based groups, playground developers and anyone who is passionate about improving children's wellbeing and making a difference in their lives.
- ✦ Organizations working with children of any age or ability. Participants can freely share the knowledge gained with their co-workers and the community.
- ✦ Unemployed youth known by the community with leadership potential and an interest in working with children who can then volunteer to become involved in/initiate play programmes.

Training material consists of:

A thumb drive (memory stick) with 8 easy to read Information Units in an interactive pdf format (235 pages). Hundreds of photographs illustrate key concepts making the material easy to understand. Details of the Units are available on request.

36 videos that demonstrate games and types of play – these can be viewed online through direct links or on the thumb drive, if no internet is available.

18 Reference documents that can be viewed online through direct links or on the thumb drive

Model answers to 11 special tasks which require answers to be written in a notebook (supplied), for the purpose of self-monitoring.

The "A Chance to Play Manual" which is used as a reference throughout the course. The course material clearly directs you to the relevant information in the Manual.

Three Assignments which must be completed and sent to ACTP by the due dates (every 6 weeks). Each Assignment will be reviewed and feedback provided after which there will be a Skype/Zoom/WhatsApp discussion to clear up any misunderstanding.

A Course Evaluation Form.
